Not illustrated. 1816 edition. Excerpt: ...preceding evening, in a direction N. i N. VV. until ten o'clock. This valley and the low mountains which form it, appear to have been torn by some great earthquake. The mountains are of clay, in strata sometimes horizontal, and at others oblique, inclining 10 to 15 degrees from north to south. As early as seven o'clock we had began to perceive some plants and wild palms at the bottom of the valley, which indicated the ' neighbourhood of water. In reality we soon discovered a small stream of drinkable water, which is the first to be found upon this road from Tor during three days journey. At nine we passed near the mountain in which is found the hot spring, which gives its name to the whole oanton. There was a well of indifferent water under the shade of some fine wild palms at the place where we stopped at ten o'clock. The soil was clayey, and calcareous as before. We set out again at one in the afternoon, directing our course to the N. W. until three o'clock, when we halted at the torrent called Wadi Corondel. At half past two we had discovered the sea, and the coast of Africa at a short distance. The Wadi Corondel is a dry torrent, which has a spring of tolerably good water. There were several fir bushes, and some palms to be seen; but we were encamped without the torrent, because the Arabs pretend that there are many venomous reptiles to be met with, which, however, they could not describe, and which I could not discover, notwithstanding my researches in the wood as well as cavities and corners of the rocks where I expected to find them. I found only a great number of large ants, and another species of small insect, the name of which I do not recollect, but it is perfectly harmless. I had found upon the way a small...
